Did They Ever Send It?

14 clips × 8 s ≈ 112 s · horizontal 16:9 · two offices: Gentle Dental (general dentist) and St. Andrew's Family Dental (specialist) · professional live-action look.

The idea

- A different problem from Buried in Emails: the referral loop that never closes. Sarah comes back to her general dentist for the crown after her implant, and the specialist's signed completion note never arrived.
- Both sides of the referral: we see the general dentist's office (Greg, Barbara) waiting, and the specialist's office (Tanya, Amanda) hunting for a note that was signed on Friday. Nobody is blamed: "Every office sends things a different way."
- Two characters introduce Tooth Referral by name: after the call, Amanda sits down with Tanya: "Let's set up Tooth Referral." She explains it in plain words (one case per referral, both offices on it; messages, X-rays, insurance and the signed note on the case) and Tanya decides to invite Gentle Dental that day.
- Same people, one month later, with Tooth Referral: the signed note is already on the case, copied into the electronic health record, follow-up asked right on the case, the phone stays quiet because both offices see the status, X-rays and the secure insurance link live in the same place, and setup took five minutes.
- Natural movement in every clip: walking in through the door, walking down the hallway, the phone ringing, rolling chairs, a coffee walk-by. Two real-looking front offices.
