Notes that write themselves

Hook (first line)

How many times this month did someone retype the same consultation letter?

How many times this month did someone retype the same consultation letter?

General dentist or specialist, the routine is the same: referral letters, consultation notes and completion letters with new names, new dates and new tooth numbers. Then print, sign and fax.

In Tooth Referral, notes write themselves. Build a template once and smart variables fill in the patient, date of birth, both offices, specialty, X-ray images and dates on every note. Every template is yours to customise: your wording, your letterhead and logo, one for each situation (consultation completed, declined appointment, general), or import the Word or PDF letter you already use. Your team can copy the note straight into your own EHR so your charts stay in sync.

An assistant can prepare it, and the doctor signs it, or it's routed to the doctor to sign. Once it's e-signed, the consultation note lands on the case, visible to both the general dentist and the specialist. No printing, no fax.
